

National list of naturalised invasive and potentially invasive garden plants

Available on the WWF Australia web site at: <http://wwf.org.au/publications>ListInvasivePlants/>

A Guide to Interpreting this List

This national list has been derived from the WA Department of Agriculture Plants Database to identify plants documented as being weedy here or overseas and that have also been cultivated at some stage by the Australian garden industry. Additional information on weed status, legal status, and commercial availability has been added to the plants on the list. It has been developed by WWF as an educational resource only to enable interested people to identify invasive and potentially invasive garden plants.

The list includes many serious weeds (generally identified with an Enviro Score of High) that should be avoided or maintained to reduce the risk of seeds or propagules escaping into bushlands or agricultural lands, as well as many that are only minor weeds if they escape from gardens. The latter group include some common vegetables, such as lettuce, tomato, and as such green waste, containing their seeds should be disposed of thoughtfully. The list also includes plants that have been cultivated by the garden industry at some stage, but not necessarily imported by the garden industry. An example is Serrated Tussock (Nassella trichotoma) that was apparently brought into Australia accidentally, and cultivated opportunistically by certain nurseries at a later time.

- S Sleeper

National Importance

- Q Naturalised garden plants on Northern Australia Quarantine Strategy (NAQS) list
- A Naturalised garden plants on the National Environmental Alert list
- EE Naturalised non-native garden plants target for national eradication and impacting natural ecosystems
- EA1 Naturalised non-native garden plants target for national eradication and impacting agricultural ecosystems for eradication or being eradicated at present
- EA2 Naturalised non-native garden plants target for national eradication and impacting agricultural ecosystems recommended for eradication
- W Naturalised garden plants on the 'Weeds of National Significance' (WONS) list

Australian Rating

The agreed categories for assessing the status of naturalised non-native species in natural ecosystems were (Groves et al., 2003):

- 0 Reported as naturalised but only known naturalised population now removed or thought to be removed
- 0? Uncertainty as to whether any plants exist
- 1 Naturalised and may be a minor problem but not considered important enough to warrant control at any location
- 1? Uncertainty as to whether a small number of plants remain
- 2 Naturalised and known to be a minor problem warranting control at 3 or fewer locations within a State or Territory
- 3 Naturalised and known to be a minor problem warranting control at 4 or more locations within a State or Territory
- 4 Naturalised and known to be a major problem at 3 or fewer locations within a State or Territory
- 5 Naturalised and known to be a major problem at 4 or more locations within a State or Territory
- ? Information is not available at present.

Notes

- ⁽²⁾ On the National Alert list, Pelargonium alchemilloides is listed, whereas the current list of naturalised garden plants available for sale includes all Pelargonium spp.
- ⁽³⁾ The species have been recently added to the State or Territory list as naturalised plants. As there is uncertainty regarding their environmental score, they have been given a status of "Environmental weed (X)" by default in the current analysis. Simultaneously, some species are naturalised in the Alps and are given (X).
- ⁽⁴⁾ The "enviro score" is combined according to the "Naturalised Where" States' order.
- ? : Australian rating varies for each subspecies and/or varieties of the species.
